Someone Who Cares

Ray Saloom was born in 1930 in Franklin Boro, Cambria County, Pennsylvania. He graduated from the local High School and was the first graduate ever to become a Doctor.

Ray's parents were immigrants, and he was taught the value of hard work.

Ray worked as a laborer in construction and at the Bethlehem Steel Mill in his hometown. Through his labor, Ray earned enough money to pay for his education at the Universities of Pittsburgh and Maryland. He also worked his way through the Philadelphia College of Osteopathic Medicine.

Ray interrupted his college education to enlist in the U. S. Army during the Korean War. He served in the Counter-Intelligence Corp as a Sgt. Major. He was later commissioned a 2nd Lt. in the Reserves.

"Government is in need of leaders who can work with people. My life has been one of serving and caring. . . My aspiration to Congress is a continuation of my life."

RAY SALOOM

Ray is married to the former Mary Manno of Johnstown, PA. They are the parents of five sons. Raymond J., Jr., age 25; Charles, age 19; Christopher, age 17; Timothy, age 15; and Eric, age 13.

The Saloom's live in Harrisville, Butler County.

Ray practices Medicine in Harrisville. He was featured on Eye Witness Magazine KDKA-TV (Sept. 14, 1975) as 'the Country Doctor-who still makes house calls.'

Ray is on the staff of Bashline Osteopathic Hospital, Grove City, PA; and Butler County Memorial Hospital. He is physician to several Nursing Homes, and has served as school physician for the Slippery Rock Area School District.

Ray was honored as 'Physician of the Year' in Pennsylvania in 1977 by the Pennsylvania Osteopathic Medical Society.
